MOKENA HOME-COMING AND HARVEST FESTIVAL OCT. 21-22

Mokena's Big Moment In It's Long Existence Has Come

Today and tomorrow, October 21 and 22, Mokena will be observing two of its most outstanding Red Letter Days, when it will hold its first Mokena Home Coming and Harvest Festival.

Mokena is 107 years old and during all this long span of time, no celebration of this character, of the kind being carried out this week, has ever been observed.

The recently organized Mokena Civic Association is sponsoring this outstanding local event. A large membership of the Association has been working very enthusiastically and industriously on various committees to put this affair over with a real bang. No time, effort nor work has been spared to promote this undertaking to a successful conclusion.

Beginning with this evening, the event will open in its full glory. You will find a very good exhibit of grains, fruits of the fields and gardens as well as the choicest autumn flowers and other blooms.

There will be all kinds of canned goods exhibited, which has been canned by the women of this community as well as other interesting and out standing displays.

Mokena PTA and Garden Club will have an interesting exhibit and don't forget to see the Mokena Volunteer Fire Department's booth. The News-Bulletin will have an interesting exhibit displaying the first issue of the paper, printed over 21 years ago, as well as a varied line of samples of printing done in the News-Bulletin shop. For the convenience of those desiring to take this opportunity to subscribe or renew their subscription and receive their premium, they may do so at this time. We will also have a free gift to all calling at our booth. Be sure and visit the News-Bulletin booth.

There will also be all kinds of games with prizes being awarded, these being donated by the local business men and others by the Civic Association. Among some of these prizes will be the popular Charlie McCarthy, gayly decorated figures representing various characters.

The evening will be enlivened with music by the Mokena School band. They will give a concert at 7:30 o'clock and there will be open air dancing with music furnished by the popular Frankfort Hill Billies.

This Festival and Home Coming, is being staged on the depot grounds and Front street will be roped off from the August Braun corner west past the Wannemacher store. This section will be brilliantly lighted making a miniature "great white way." There will also be strings of colored lights to add to the beauty of night decorations. Flood lights will be used along most of the business places.

A very large reproduction of the prize winning emblem of the Mokena Civic Association is hanging in the main window of the Mokena State Bank. This emblem was drawn by Miss Alice Lauffer, of Mokena, art student, and was awarded first cash prize by the Mokena Civic Association.

There will be plenty of good refreshments on the ground. Special ribbons will be awarded for prize-winning exhibits. First prize being a blue ribbon with gold letters; second prize, red ribbon with gold letters.

On Saturday afternoon the kiddies will have their inning. Children's day will be observed from 3 to 5 o'clock. The main feature in the afternoon will be a decorated bicycle parade. A prize will be given to the best decorated bike. There will be a children's dance and other features.

In the evening the older folks will come in for a lot of fun when the famous Jitter Bug dances will take place on the open-air dance platform. We might add that the old-time square dances will be featured both Friday and Saturday nights.

The band also will be heard in a concert at 7 o'clock Saturday evening, and at the climax the gas awards will be announced.

In the adjoining columns will be found the official program for the two days. It might be a nice idea to save this official program edition as a sort of souvenir of the first Mokena Home-Coming. On second page of this edition will be found a number of old-time pictures of Mokena scenes and Mokena people. Look them over and see if you can remember them, or if these events were pictured so far back that you cannot remember them, maybe someone in your family can. Also don't forget to patronize Mokena merchants and other businessmen whose ads appear on the following pages of this issue. We might add that the open-air dance floor was secured through the courtesy of Chief John Helenhouse, of the Orland Fire Department.

Everyone is cordially invited to attend Mokena's outstanding event. A good time is assured for all.

Here is another sample of the thoroughness with which the Civic Association has handled the two-day program of events. They have even organized a weather committee with Barney Hostert, Aug. Hentsch, Robt. Marks and quite a number of other local prognosticators. This committee's job is to see that the weatherman is going to withhold rain and stormy weather until the big affair is over. We are just going to watch and see what kind of a standing this committee has with old man weather.

Well folks we think this is about all that we have to say, and now it will be up to you to come and visit us and just see what we have for you.

Mokena Artist Draws Prize Winning Emblem

Miss Alice Lauffer, an artist of Mokena, drew the above prize winning emblem for the Mokena Civic Association. She was awarded first prize.

The legend is: "According to the good and just." Laurel wreath is Civic achievement and the small flower, violet, the Illinois State flower.

Another neat design, but more plain in nature, drawn by F. Clevenger, also of Mokena, was awarded second prize.

Amateur Show Next Big Coming Mokena Event

Mokena is beginning to pep things up in real style with the Home-Coming celebration sliding back into history. Another event is going to the forefront, this being the big amateur show which the live Mokena Band Parents' Association is sponsoring for two nights, Nov. 3 and 4, in the Mokena school auditorium.

We will tell you more about this next week, but suffice to say that an extremely interesting and entertaining program is being prepared, and all the talent will be the amateur type—and there are some mighty good ones.

Applications have been received from a large number of folks wishing to appear on this program. Applications have come in from all the surrounding towns, including Blue Island and Joliet. Watch for further details in next week's paper, and then reserve these two nights, Nov. 3 and 4, for you will certainly not want to miss this Mokena home-talent show.

Wolf Road Once Indian Trail Now Paved Highway

What at one time, was only an Indian trail, leading from the portage, at the point where the cities of Kankakee and Borbonnais now stand, northward through Will and Cook counties, to the Wisconsin line and known as the trail of the Wolf, is now a paved highway, known as the Wolf Road, linking this territory with the famous national highway, the Lincoln Highway, and to the important Southwest Highway in Cook county.

Wolf Road was paved in Cook county in 1928 up to the Will and Cook county line, a mile and a half north of Mokena. When the Will County Good Roads Bond Issue was floated, the paving of Wolf Road from the Cook and Will county line, through Mokena southwest, was carried on and completed in November 1930.

Wolf Road is the only paved highway running through Mokena. A very interesting history of this old Indian trail was taken from the records of the Chicago Historical Society and the Newberry Libraries in Chicago by Don C. Hall of Mokena, which is as follows:

"The Algonquin tribe of Indians inhabiting the Hudson River Country in the State of New York during the seventeenth century, were divided into three branches or Clans, viz: 'Muckqua' (bear), 'Mechchaooh' (wolf), and 'Toonpaooh' (turtle.)

"In the year 1670, the branch known as 'The Wolf' moved to the westward, and finally settled in Indiana and Illinois settling their wigwams along the south bank of the Kankakee River, where they became known as the 'Mahingans'. In this territory were numerous tribes, chief among which were the 'Potawatamies' and the 'Iroquois'.

"The 'portage' at the point where the cities of Kankakee and Borbonnais now stand, was called 'Theak-A-Kee' or 'The Wolf', and the road to the north, 'Theak-A-Kee', 'Ty-Yan-Ac-Kee', a combination from the Mahingan and Potawatamie languages, the liberal translation of which is 'The Trail of the Wolf Through The Wonderful Land'.

The trail was used by the Jesuit Missionaries, the early explorers and the fur traders who came from the east about the year 1818, crossing the Kankakee River at the Indian portage—'Theak-Ka-Kee' and taking the trail due north to Fort 'La-Bay' (Green Bay) in Wisconsin.

The route became known among the white pioneers, as 'Wolf Trail' or 'Wolf Road'. The Indians called it 'The Wolf Road'—'The Pathway of The Paleface', and this name it has retained for nearly three hundred years."

The Warning car was very badly smashed and the colliding truck was also badly damaged.

Fire Destroys Garage On Wm. Junker Farm

Fire of unknown origin broke out in a garage on the Wm. Junker farm on Wolf Road and 143rd street, west of Orland Park, late Monday afternoon. The blaze made quick headway and by the time the Orland Park Fire Department was called, the garage was a mass of flames. A tank of gasoline exploded and shot a fire stream high in the air.

The Orland Park Fire Department after a hard fight, prevented the blaze from spreading to adjoining buildings. An automobile in the garage fell prey to the flames. The Tinley Park Fire Dept., also was summoned but the fire was under control when they arrived.

Mr. Junker in token of his appreciation for the good work done by the firemen presented them with a big supply of water melons.

Red Cross Branch Is Organized At Mokena Friday

A Red Cross Branch of the Will County Chapter of the American Red Cross was organized in the Mokena public school last Friday evening. Mrs. Robert Martin of Joliet was in charge of the meeting in the absence of Dr. H. Woodruff who was unable to be present. Mrs. Martin introduced Mrs. Olga Wilkey, secretary of the County chapter who gave a very intensive report of the work of the Red Cross in general and that of Will County also, showing the fine work which has and is being done by this most worthy organization.

It was shown in times of national disaster such as floods, fires etc., that the Red Cross goes into such a territory and helps save families, supplies food, clothing, medical service and after meeting the emergency, rehabilitates families, in many cases helping those who have lost everything. They also help veterans in securing their Government claims.

Under this organization, classes are established in teaching first-aid, home nursing etc., and they have classes at all times.

The following officers were elected: Chairman of the Mokena Branch Mrs. R. M. McGuire; Vice Chairman, Mrs. Hugo Niethammer; Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. Wm. Semmler. Mrs. Walter Erickson, newly appointed County Nurse was present and spoke briefly of her work in the 157 rural schools of this county.

DEATH COMES TO W. WARNING OF FRANKFORT

Wendell, aged ten years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Warning of Frankfort, Ill., and who has been in poor health for several years, passed away in his parent's home Monday morning at 9:45 o'clock.

Wendell was a student in the Frankfort public school, and was a regular attendant of the Methodist Sunday School. The past summer he attended the Daily Vacation Bible School held in the Methodist church and he was very interested in his studies and work there.

Wendell was born in Frankfort February 28, 1928. He is survived by his parents, two brothers, Glenn and Stanley and grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Warning and many other relatives.

Funeral services were conducted from the home to the Frankfort M. E. Church Wednesday afternoon. With the pastor, the Rev. C. F. Schellhase officiating. Burial was in Pleasant Hill cemetery.

Henry Koerner Is A Busy Man These Days

One of the busiest men in the country these days as a result of the approaching general election is Henry Koerner, Will County Clerk, for it is the county clerk who must arrange for the printing of the ballots, the poll books, instruct the judges and clerks in their duties and distribute the supplies.

Mr. Koerner is a candidate for re-election as county clerk but he is kept so busy by the duties of his office that he has little time to devote to his general campaign.

Mr. Koerner is just completing his first term as county clerk. Except for serving on the Manhattan School Board and as highway commissioner of that township, this term as county clerk is the only other elective public office he has held.

He is seeking re-election on his record, which reports of the county board show to be excellent. When he took office there were practically no funds on hand with which to carry on its operation, board records show, but thru efficient administration and economy Mr. Koerner has been able to make the office pay its own way and pile up a surplus of more than $3,200, which has been turned in to the county treasurer, reports reveal.

This surplus, it was pointed out, could have been larger had Mr. Koerner billed the county for all the fees to which his office was entitled. Records show that he could have collected approximately $135,000 in fees from the county board of supervisors for work done for the county in the past four years but he refused to do it because he wanted to save money for the taxpayers.

The county clerk has many duties, the keeping of the records of the county court, the extension of taxes the preparation of the assessors' books, inheritance tax cases, the adoption and welfare of children, cases concerned with mental diseases and cases involving the care of the blind. He also serves as clerk of the county board and has charge of elections.

"He has endeavored to serve the public as he would serve the stockholders of a private business of which he had the operation", Mr. Koerner says, "It has been his constant aim to operate the office of county clerk with a maximum of service at a minimum of cost. He is quite willing to let his record speak for itself for it is on that record that he is seeking re-election."

Seek Extension of S. W. Highway Beyond Orland

The completion of the Southwest Highway in Orland township is again being aired and it looks as tho the matter may become a reality. Monday of this week Andrew Ludwig, Democratic committeeman of Orland township, Dr. W. W. Schussler, son Walter R., and several other interested Southwest Highway boosters had an audience with the Cook county Board of Commissioners and a request was made of them that the Southwest Highway be connected up with the right of way purchased by the county sometime ago to the southwest of Orland and that the route be brought in from its present ending north east of Orland thru the edge of the forest back of the school house and continue south thru the land between the Lutheran and Catholic churches at Orland and connect with right of way bought on west side of Wabash right of way to the junction with Wolf road where the Maple road now intersects. This new routing would take Southwest highway off of Wolf road and 143rd St. and would lessen the distance to Orland Park. The Board of Commissioners was also asked to have the Southwest Highway made a four lane highway from Palos to the south side of Orland Park. The county officials will take this matter up soon.

The festival held that evening in Tracery's Medici Room was one of such intimate splendor of matter and mind that, though I subscribed to it, when first I awoke the next morning, I wondered if it was not a dream.

I sat between two Old Masters—on the left the Duchess of Whelp and the right of the Countess of Brief. Each glowed with the sterling quality of a forgotten age. Lost arts made up their being. Sheer beauty lived with kindness: sheer brilliance beamed with good will. And each admiring the other was thus exalted. Their natural royalty was duly served. Powdered footmen in scarlet livery stood behind every chair: gold plate winked upon the table: the choicest fare was perfectly presented.

And there I will leave an event which neither Herrick nor I will ever forget, for that evening we two hobnobbed with the stuff that queens were made of in olden days.

That Herrick found instant favor, I need not say. Indeed, Old Harry and he were as good as a play, for, as I have said before, his address was beyond compare, and I think that each of them whetted the other's wit.

When dinner was done, Herrick and I were left with orders to "join the ladies" in ten minutes' time: and when that had gone, we were led to a glorious salon, whose sixteenth-century tapestries filled the eye.

Though the evening was warm, a fire of logs had been lighted upon the hearth: before this the Duchess was resting upon a mighty chaise longue, and Elizabeth was standing beside a jamb of the fireplace, one of her beautiful hands on the chiseled stone, regarding the leisurely flicker that hovered above a hillock of rose-gray ash.

As the door closed behind us—"I have ordered your car," said Old Harry, "for half past ten. That gives us just half an hour, which should be enough. I've one or two things to say, and I'll say them first."

"I think we all know where we are and where we shall be next Tuesday at five o'clock. On no account try to conceal that we have already met. That way madness lies. We have all met here tonight—for the very first time. Let no one be ill at ease. Except for Richard Exon, I don't think anyone will."

"Oh, madam," protested Herrick. "Don't interrupt," said Old Harry. "Besides, you'd be at ease with a gaggle of Elders discussing the wrath to come."

I very near laughed and Elizabeth covered her mouth.

"If you feel uneasy, Richard, always remember at once that though Brief is doing the honors, you are Elizabeth's guest. And that, I think, should bring your confidence back. You will take your man, Winter, with you, and I shall take three servants to look after me. One will be Parish—that excellent English page whom you have already seen. Should need arise, we can communicate through them, with all convenience. Tell the police that you have been invited to Brief, as you understand, to meet me. That will set you above all suspicion, such is this snobbish world."

"One thing more. "As luck will have it, Elizabeth's mother's jewels were held by the firm of goldsmiths whom I have always employed. Bauble and Levity—you probably know the name. She has, therefore, written to them to say that by my advice she will have the gems reset and desiring them to be ready with new designs against her coming to London in six weeks' time. That letter will send the ball flying: and since she gave this address, the reply will come to this house and will go on to Brief by hand, in my private bag."

"And now can anyone think of anything else? Because, if they can, let us have it—for better or worse. We shan't see each other again until we strut on to the stage."

There was a little silence. "Very good," said Old Harry. "And now I want to see Mr. Herrick alone. Take your leave of me, Richard, and then make the best of the terrace, until Mr. Herrick appears. Elizabeth will go with you."

I stepped to her side. "Madam," I said, "I have much to thank you for."

"I don't know about that. Never mind. I've much enjoyed your visit—and that's a thing I can say to very few guests."

"Thank you, madam." I put her hand to my lips. "I hope you're not very tired."

"Tired be damned," said Old Harry. "I never felt so fit in my life."

"Till Tuesday, madam."

The Duchess smiled and nodded, and I followed Elizabeth out of the handsome chamber and, presently, into the air.

Elizabeth led the way to the head of the steps.

"It's all your doing," she said.

"Which is absurd," said I. "She's mad about you."

"My dear, you gave her the lead. I had a claim upon her. How could she fail me, when you, upon whom I had none, had done so much?"

I shook my head. "You must thank yourself," I said. "I saw you—and that was enough. And as with me, so with her. The king's ring got you inside: but, once you were in—well, supposing you'd asked for the moon, she might have told you off, but when she was through, she'd have sent for a pair of steps."

Elizabeth laughed. Then she slid her arm through mine. "I wish I was going with you. I've been so happy at Raven: and with you is to run into debt—your debt. And at once one's instinct is to do what little one can to pay you back."

Elizabeth raised her eyebrows. "I'm afraid you're an idealist, Richard. And that's a mistake, my dear. Red Lead Lane should have shown you . . . But then the complete idealist never learns. If it makes you happy to set me up in a niche, why then you must have your way. I'll smile upon you from there. And sometimes, when you're not looking, I might climb down and be a good-looking girl, with the usual human passions, a weakness for animals and a definite love of dress." She plucked at her frock. "Can there any good thing come out of Salz-

the matter, I presently grew quite sure that we were to be attacked, and, since I was driving, I made Herrick take my pistol, because, for once in a way, he had left his behind, on the bed, he said.

Our alarms were without foundation.

We were not fired upon, and Raven was fast asleep. And since we were very tired, we shared a bottle of beer and stumbled upstairs.

I had put on my pajamas, when Herrick opened my door.

"What d'you make of this?" he said. "The fire-arm has gone."

"Gone?" said I, staring. "Gone," said Herrick. "As I told you just now, I left it out on the bed. Well, the bed's been made:

"What D'you Make of This?" He Said. "The Fire-Arm Has Gone."

if this morning I'd dreamed that I shouldn't come back, I—I wouldn't have gone. It may have been out of order, but I know I'd jump at the chance to do it again. I've . . . much enjoyed . . . my 'week-end with a couple of men.'"

"They'll miss you terribly, Elizabeth."

"Sit in the meadow tomorrow—I'll think of you there. Close to the stream—by yourself: between lunch and tea. And, if I can, I'll sit here—at the head of the steps. Oh, and please be very careful and always go armed. Remember, he knows where you are, and the woods about Raven are thick."

"I promise," I said. "And on Tuesday . . ."

"On Tuesday I'll see you again. And on Wednesday we'll ride before breakfast—that's natural enough. Besides, it'll be my job to entertain you as a guest."

"I'll never be easy," I said, "when you're out of my sight. Here I know that you're safe: but at Brief . . ." I drew in my breath. "Can you trust your maid? I think she should sleep in your suite."

"Perhaps you're right. I'll see what Old Harry says."

"I'd be easier, Elizabeth. You see, by day I can always be within call. But by night I can't. And if you want me to sleep—well, you'll do as I ask."

My lady lifted her head to the lambent sky. "You don't look back," she said, "do you—when you've put your hand to the plow? You're not going to rest till—till you've carried me out of the wood?"

"Men don't lay down their honors before their time."

"And then?"

"They lay them down," I said slowly: "and go their way."

There was a little silence.

"What way shall you go, Richard?"

I drew myself up.

"I don't know. Perhaps John Herrick will help me. We might do something together, until Lord Naseby dies. But I'll always be at your service. You'll only have to call me. I'll always come."

"Why do you say that, Richard?"

"Because you have made me your servant—for as long as I live."

"I don't want you to be my servant."

I laughed at that.

"Then you shouldn't have your eyes, or your mouth, or your beautiful ways. You shouldn't move as you do, or throw a smile over your shoulder, or push back your hair from your temples with one of your lovely hands. And you shouldn't have your nature—which makes a man want to pay tribute with all his heart."

"And what does he get—in return?"

"He's paid in advance," said I. "That very question shows that you don't understand. To have to do burg? My dear, you wait. If you like the look of me now, you'll get up and walk at Brief."

"There spoke Old Harry," said I: "but not Elizabeth."

She whipped her arm out of mine and started aside.

"What ever d'you mean?"

I set my hands on her shoulders and turned her round.

"That you are a work of nature and she is a work of art. And you cannot play on her piano, and she cannot play on your pipe. I think you only did it to—make me alter my focus and see that you're not the nonsuch I think you are. But it only upsets me, my lady, and doesn't do any good. I know you've got failings—you must have, because you're of flesh and blood: but you're rather exceptional—The heaven such grace did lend her. That she might admire be. Well, you must let me admire you in my own way."

"All right," said Elizabeth, meekly. "But don't bring me garlands, Richard. I couldn't bear that."

"You wicked girl. You—"

"That's better. And there's John coming. Say good-by nicely. Quick."

She had put up her beautiful mouth, and I had stooped and kissed it before I knew where I was.

It was half-past one in the morning before we once more approached Raven, and, remembering Old Harry's words, I found myself thanking God that Elizabeth was not with us and would not have to run such a gauntlet again. Thus thinking upon so, of course, it had to be moved. But it's not in the room."

"It must be," said I. "You've missed it."

"Come and see," said Herrick, and led the way.

For full five minutes we sought it, and sought it in vain.

At length—

"Brenda must have it," said I. "The thing's not here."

"I don't think that's likely," said Herrick, "in view of what Winter said. And yet I can hardly believe that Percy Elbert the Good would steal it away. And tell me another thing. Why do these crises arise, when one is so drunk with sleep that one can hardly stand up?"

With that, he sank heavily down on the foot of his bed.

As he did so, a deafening explosion made me jump out of my skin, and, in one most frantic convulsion, Herrick leapt upward and outward, as though propelled by some spring.

"My God," said I, and ripped the quilt from the bed.

Twelve inches from the foot of the bedstead, a broad-arrow ruck in the blanket declared that below the blanket something had moved.

I turned to Herrick.

"Are you all right?"

His hands clapped fast to his seat—

"Well, I'm still the same shape," said Herrick, "if that's what you mean: but you can't sit down on a land-mine and be as good as you were."

Someone was running on the landing.

Hippocrates Was Right on the Theory Of Going to Bed for Treatment of Cold

After 2,400 years of preoccupation with the common cold, the medical profession, as represented by the technicians of the Stillman infirmary at Harvard university, has decided that the best treatment for this universal malady is to go to bed. As this was the treatment favored by hippocrates, the results of all the scientific experiments which have been conducted since it was first promulgated can be represented by a single zero, comments a St. Louis Dispatch editorial writer.

In the circumstances, afflicted humanity would be acting reasonably if it classified the cold as one of the inescapable phenomena of life and behaved accordingly. After all, though a bed is not the universal refuge it once was, it is not a bad place. Even when the concurrent dreams are troubled, they are no worse than the realities with which the conscious mind has to grapple.

Unfortunately, no such easy escape is possible to a civilization which has placed its faith in science. Though the heavens fall and every sinus cavity in Christendom be under attack from within and without, we will stick to the perpendicular and await the next draft from the laboratory. Brown mixtures, blue mixtures and green mixtures may have failed us; radiology, colored lights, massages, intravenous injections, overfeeding, underfeeding and steam baths may have touched everything but the right spot, but we are still hopeful. Some day the right chemical affinities will find each other and a sovereign remedy will arise from the test tube, like one of the benevolent geni.

Meanwhile, though we sniffle and explode every time there is a change in the weather, we remain loyal to our gods.

Balloon Escapes Over Channel

Breaking its moorings in Manston, England, a captive balloon vanished, trailing 10,000 feet of cable. It eluded a Royal Air force plane ordered to shoot it down, drifted across the English channel and brought down high tension wires in Audruocq, France. This plunged Calais, Boulogne, St. Omer, Bethune and many other French towns in darkness. The Audruocq post office was set on fire, but the balloon was not affected by its encounter with hundreds of thousands of volts.

Lesson for October 23

OUR DAY OF REST

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:8-11; Luke 13:10-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy.—Exodus 20:8.

Rest—how full of meaning that little word is when we recall that it means quiet for the struggling one, calm for the troubled, repose for the weary, tranquillity for the disturbed, cessation of labor for the worn-out one. God in His infinite wisdom saw that without rest man would soon destroy himself, and He made provision for one day in seven when labor should cease and man should be free for that re-creation of soul and body which should fit him for the labor of the week. Men in their greed have coveted the time God gave for rest and have used it for themselves, and the ragged nerves and broken bodies, to say nothing of the impoverished spirits of our day, testify that it can be done only at our peril.

Our study centers around Scripture passages which have to do with the Jewish Sabbath, but since it was essentially a day of rest, and afforded an opportunity for the worship of God, the principles surrounding it are applicable to our day of rest—the first day of the week, the Lord's Day.

I. Why We Keep a Day of Rest (Exod. 20:8-11).

1. God commanded that there should be a day of rest—one out of seven—and that should be sufficient to cause His people to "remember" the day "to keep it holy." It is cause for grave concern that Sunday has become a day of swimming, hiking, auto-driving, golfing, and one might go on with the list almost indefinitely. Many men or women who have had built into their own characters the stalwart virtues nurtured by family attendance at the house of God, have not only forgotten their own need and responsibility but are destroying every vestige of interest in divine worship in the hearts of their children. It is serious business to go astray oneself, but infinitely more serious to mislead one's own children.

Notice that the day of rest was to be not only for the family but also for servants and for visitors. The employer who operates his factory or office on Sunday violates this commandment. Note also that the man who is to rest on the seventh day is supposed to work on the six days. Some folk neglect to do both.

2. God's command is strengthened by the divine example (v. 11). We are not able to do all things that God does, but here we are privileged to follow His example.

II. How We Keep the Day of Rest (Luke 13:10-17).

The incident recorded by Luke does not give us an exhaustive list of things to be done with our day of rest, but it is interesting to note that our Lord was

1. In the house of God (v. 10). Jesus was in the synagogue. The distinguished Apostle Paul never became too great or too good to attend divine worship. We all need to go to church (if it is at all possible for us to do so) to fellowship with others in the things of Christ. Let us have a revival of church attendance, and not only on Sunday mornings, but also on Sunday night and for midweek prayer meeting.

2. Alert to the needs of others (vv. 11, 12). It is not indicated that the woman asked to be healed. Jesus saw her need and met it. We can not do what he did, but there are needs that we can meet if we are but alert to see them and willing to help.

3. Active in service (v. 13). In spite of the criticism which He knew would come from the lazy and helpless standers-by, Jesus did the work of God. We may glorify God by being ready—yes anxious—to serve in the church. Our daily work is set aside on the Lord's Day not that we should be indolent, but that we should be free to do the Lord's work.

4. Contending for the faith (vv. 14-17). Jesus met the unjust criticism (which, by the way, was leveled at the poor woman because the critic feared Jesus) by a masterly appeal to the law of the Pharisees (vv. 15, 16). But He did more than that, for He ably defended the rights of humanity as superior to the formalities of man-made law. The law is always supreme until the Lawgiver comes, and no law can hinder Him by its letter, as He fulfills its spirit.

We may not speak as Jesus did, that is to declare what the law is, but we may in His name, and by His grace and power declare the full counsel of God, defend it against its critics and withstand those who while bearing the name of Christian leaders only hinder the work of Christ (compare III John 9, 10). For such service we need His guidance, His wisdom, His power, and His grace.

HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.

You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor.

Patriotism does not consist in waving banners, or wearing uniforms, or belonging to societies, or denouncing other lands, or waxing eloquent about God's own country. It consists rather in exemplifying in the twentieth century, the ancient truth that "righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." —Dr. Mary E. Wooley.

TINLEY PARK

Mrs. Wm. Sieckman celebrated her 90th birthday last Sunday afternoon and evening in the home of her daughter, Anna Meyer.

The next meeting of the Community Firemen Association will be held at Flossmoor Monday evening at 8 o'clock.

Miss Arnetta Mancke was surprised in her home last Saturday evening in honor of her birthday by a group of friends. Arnetta's birthday was not until Monday, but Saturday was a more convenient time to observe it. Games were played and refreshments were served by Mrs. Mancke assisted by Mrs. Rice. Those present were: Edna Nieman, Jean Henke, Marie Bettenhausen, Bernice Bettenhausen, Eva Marie Bennett, Ethel Witte, Jeanette Freberg, Mary Jane Cousineau, Velma Lorenz, Kenneth Niemann, Billy Mancke and Scotty DeVaulk from Tinley Park. PTA MINSTREL SHOW NEWS

The first meeting of the cast for the Minstrel Show was held Monday in the home of the coach, Mrs. Trudie Swisher. Great enthusiasm was shown by all and if the willingness displayed by these members to do their part, means anything, our show will surely be a huge success.

Now you Old-Timers who have wanted the PTA to have a minstrel, like the one they had 12 years ago your wish is to be realized in this show. This one will be another petticoat Minstrel and you will be able to sit back and renew old memories, when you see and listen to several of the old timers doing their various parts again.

With the marvelous talent of our many new members, the combination of both old and new should make a wonderful and successful show.

Watch the paper from week to week for our progress, also the date of the show, which will be held during the early part of December.

Here Is How You Can Look Slimmer

IF YOU take a woman's size, you'll certainly enjoy having both of these smart, new, slenderizing styles. They're extremely becoming, and made up in materials and colors of your own choosing, they will be the joy of your life, one for house work, and the other for afternoon and dinner engagements. Both of these dresses are so very simple to make that you'll thoroughly enjoy doing it.

Each pattern includes a detailed sew chart for the guidance of beginners.

The House Dress.

Notice how very practical and comfortable this dress is, with every detail you want for working freedom and slim lines. Darts make the waistline slim and neat, but not tight. The armholes are ample, the sleeves very short, and slashed for greater freedom. The skirt has sufficient, unhampering fullness at the hem. It's a diagram design, that you can finish in a few hours. For this, choose percale, calico, or gingham.

The Afternoon Dress.

Just wait to see how nice and slim your hips look, in this cleverly designed dress, with just a little fullness above the waist to emphasize the slick, smooth cut below. This design gives you the fashionable bodice detailing, in soft, lengthening jabot drapes that have a dressy, but not a fussy, look. Bishop sleeves are another new and very becoming style, most flattering to large women. This dress will be lovely in velvet, crepe satin, thin wool or silk crepe.

The Patterns.

1559 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 requires 4 1/2 yards of 35 inch material. 2 1/2 yards of ricrac braid. 1613 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. With long sleeves, size 38 requires 5 yards of 39 inch material; with short sleeves, 4 1/2 yards. Collar and jabot in contrast would take 3/4 yard.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Dust Bowl Looms as Proving Ground For Enlightened American Agriculture

Scientific Farming, Rain Combine to Cut South-west's "Blow" Area Next Summer.

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

The sun is beginning to shine through America's southwestern dust clouds. Where five years ago there was drouth and desolation, encouraged farmers now prick up their ears to hear rain pound on windows that were once pockmarked by sandstorms.

This is taking place in the "dust bowl" region, comprising western Kansas, eastern Colorado, the Oklahoma Panhandle and northwest Texas. But it extends northward, too, through desolate wastes of North and South Dakota where a scant few years ago farmers fed their cattle Russian thistle because nothing else would grow.

Rain has been partly responsible for this new optimism, for the depressing dry cycle of the 1930s appears to be ending. This year's rains have been the heaviest since 1932, and like a great piece of wool, the dust bowl seems to shrink when it gets wet.

How the dust bowl has been shrinking, and a fairly accurate prediction of next year's trouble-center. Contour farming, and other efforts to re-anchor the soil are responsible.

But behind the dust bowl's shrinkage is something far more fundamental than rain. It is a definite change in America's treatment of her No. 1 industry, agriculture.

New Century, New Problems.

Oldtimers recall how, 50 years ago, each midwestern homestead was an independent kingdom on which the farmer lived without concern for high neighbor's well-being. The land was new and good; no problem was bigger than the homestead itself. But since free land disappeared, since year-after-year cultivation began loosening the soil from its anchors, problems have sprung up that are not localized. It all boils down to the problem of preserving our land.

This is far more important than the matter of agricultural prices and surplus. When land begins eroding and blowing away it spreads like a cancerous disease. America's cancer lies in an area that from 1928 was the "breadbasket of the nation," producing some 300,000,000 bushels of wheat a year. From 1932 to 1936 production dropped to 150,000,000 bushels. The cancer is still spreading, mostly to the northeast into Kansas' corn belt. But the encouraging factor is that man can now reconquer the original dust bowl, and is at last learning how this precious farm land should be handled.

Today's farmer admits the good earth has been misused. Through a half century of boom era farming its resources were drained and no attempt was made to restore them. Years ago there was no such thing as crop rotation, nor did a washed-out hillside cause much concern. But eventually the good earth got plain mad, dried up and blew away.

Agriculture's Proving Ground.

The dust bowl offers agriculture's best example of what must be done throughout the Midwest, and what will result. In this 97,000,000 acres of wasted land—once highly productive farm territory—co-operation fostered by the United States department of agriculture is winning a painstaking battle. Though thousands have migrated, though countless farms stand deep in churning sand, the dust bowl is emerging as a proving ground for American agriculture.

It was not enough that farmers learned to leave a good ground cover during winter months, nor was it enough to learn that terracing will prevent erosion from both causes—washouts and blowing. It took money to carry out these plans.

First, the Farm Security administration offered loans to farmers who would handle their land scientifically, making further loans if they wished to lease adjacent neglected "blow land" and anchor it down. Though 220,000 dust bowl farms have been placed under good management this way, and although the Jones-Bankhead act permits the government to purchase remaining idle blow land, the new spirit of co-operative attack is best illustrated by still another method—the soil conservation district.

Given U. S. Assistance.

This is a simple plan. Farmers in a certain area can form an association to lease abandoned land, thereby qualifying for a special payment from the Agricultural Adjustment administration. The government provides machinery to remove buried fence posts, level hummocks and put the abandoned land in shape. Funds for additional treatment come from the Farm Security administration, and this loan is repaid when AAA allotments are made to the district.

This co-operative work has been going on unnoticed in the dust bowl and other drouth areas, and this autumn the amazing results were brought to the public's attention for the first time. There is a popular misconception that the dust bowl is a new "great American desert," but farm experts are quick to point out that it is a potentially productive region of generally good soils. Most of the land is level and can be operated with modern farm machinery. It has produced bumper crops in the past and can again.

Department of agriculture officials confidently predict that a relatively small percentage of the land operated this past summer will be subject to blowing next winter and spring. They have found some of the land not suited to crops—about 6,000,000 of the 32,000,000 acres now under cultivation—and this will be put back to grass immediately, eventually becoming suitable for grazing.

The latest figures on dust bowl progress look good. Its original 97,000,000 acres are now reduced to an expected 16,000,000 acres for next year, which means the proving ground has succeeded and that similar technique can be applied to drouth-ridden farms throughout the Midwest.

HOW to SEW

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

HERE we offer a suggestion for hanging ruffled curtains that will make your windows a little different from those of your neighbors and lend no end of style to your rooms. Double curtain rods are needed to give the crossed effect and a valance board is added to the top of the window as shown. Here the valance is the sort that comes with ready made curtains and the top is folded back to make it double. In thumbtacking it to the valance board, do not stretch it—just "ease it on" so that it hangs well. If you feel that the windows need color, the valance and tie backs may be of plain glazed chintz that repeats the strongest color in your room color scheme. A contrasting valance may be either plain or gathered.

Germany Builds New Zeppelin, Unshaken by Past Tragedies

A year ago last May, when the giant Hindenburg exploded while landing at Lakehurst, N. J., the world thought lighter-than-air craft were a proven failure. But though one after another airship has been wrecked by structural defects, wartime shells, storms and explosions, Germany still has faith.

Just launched is the new LZ-130, christened "Graf Zeppelin" after an earlier lighter-than-air ship. The new Graf Zeppelin is a sister ship of the ill-fated Hindenburg, and in outward appearance is the same. But a visit to the hangar at Friedrichshafen, Germany, offers convincing proof that the similarity ends there.

The LZ-130 is 803 feet long with a beam of 135 feet. When inflated it will hold 7,060,000 cubic feet of gas, helium if the United States government will supply it. Germany wants to avoid hydrogen, whose inflammability caused the Hindenburg's downfall.

Eckener Is Leader.

The guiding genius behind Germany's dirigibles is Dr. Hugo Eckener, who has devoted most of his life to lighter-than-air research. Most of the new LZ-130's new features can be attributed to him. For example, the mass of metal inside the ship is made of duralumin, an amazingly light alloy. Helium—if Germany gets it—will be stored in 16 doughnut-shaped compartments.

The ship is powered by four 1,000-horsepower motors capable of taking the ship from Germany to Lakehurst, N. J., in two and one-half days, returning in two. Store rooms, baggage compartments and passenger accommodations are inside the monster's belly, but actual navigation takes place in gondola-like control cars.

The Graf Zeppelin has 20 cabins, accommodating 40 passengers as compared with the Hindenburg's load of 70. The smaller load is necessitated because helium lifts slower than hydrogen. Dining quarters are located in the center of the main runway, flanked on one side by a lounge and reading room, and on the other side by another lounge, a smoking room and a bar. Promenade decks are fitted with huge slanting windows that enable passengers to watch the world below.

When regular transatlantic passenger service is inaugurated, it will cost $450 to come from Frankfurt to Lakehurst, against $400 on the Hindenburg. Smaller pay loads are responsible for the added fare.

Strong in her faith, Germany is already planning the LZ-131, to be larger still. America's contribution to the dirigible field will be a $3,000,000 U. STARTLING FACTS ABOUT RURAL AMERICA

$5,000,000. ANNUALLY IN FAIR PRIZES

$83 SOW PRODUCES $1750.00 LITTER OF PIGS

50,000,000 PEOPLE ATTEND FAIRS EACH YEAR IN U.S.A.

It isn't difficult to visualize why agriculture is the world's largest industry, after reviewing some of the figures just released by the Firestone Farm Service Bureau. These amazing facts were uncovered in connection with the Voice of the Farm noonday radio program.

(1) Five million dollars is the figure that's handed out in fair prize money each season. State fairs contribute about half of the figure and county fairs put up the remainder.

(2) C. P. Mills, St. Joseph, Illinois, farmer, has shown an extra profit of about $1,000 annually since he started keeping books on his farm operations. His bookkeeping takes about 208 hours a year—and that figures $5.00 an hour.

(3) In Nehawka, Nebraska, Harry Knabe paid $83.00 for a Hampshire brood sow. The $1750.00 he received for the first litter of pigs for breeding purposes was a gross profit of 2106% on his investment, and he kept two pigs from the litter.

(4) Crowds equivalent to almost two-fifths of the population of the United States attend fairs each year. Fairs outdraw the attendance at big league baseball, college football, basketball and professional hockey combined.

Through the efforts of the Firestone Farm Service Bureau millions of farmers throughout the country are receiving authentic information concerning problems that confront them in the adoption of better farming practices. This organization maintains a corps of practical farm experts and counselors who are prepared to handle any type of farm problem that may arise.—Adv.

A survey of the political situation in the Eastern states indicates that only the New England states are likely to go Republican... Indications point to a tough fight in the next congress for the thirty-hour week... Roosevelt got a real break in the New York Democratic convention.

WASHINGTON.—Maine and Vermont, the only two states which gave their electoral vote to Alf M. Landon two years ago, are the only two states absolutely sure of going Republican this November. More than that, the Republican leaders who know what is going on do not even claim, in private conversations, that the G. O. P. will carry enough states to make a formidable showing—not enough to make a total of one-third of the electoral votes if this were a presidential election.

Maine has already had her election, and will send a solid Republican delegation of three to the house. That's what she did in 1936. Vermont will also send a solid Republican delegation, of one, to the house, and re-elect a Republican senator.

New Hampshire is doubtful, though indications are that she will defeat Sen. Fred H. Brown, Democrat, and elect not only a Republican senator but two Republican representatives.

In Massachusetts the Republicans hope, but are far from sure, that they will be able to elect a governor, due as much to the hatred of various Democratic groups for the Democratic gubernatorial nominee, James M. Curley, as to the strength of their own ticket. There is no senator to be elected this year, and the Republicans do not hope for any gains in the house. The Democratic sweep never hit the Bay state's congressional delegation as it did most other states. She has ten Republicans and five Democrats now in the house.

Republican leaders have little hope for anything in Rhode Island, and, since the renomination of Sen. Augustine Lonergan despite his being one of the anti-court packing group of purge fame, they have virtually no hope in Connecticut, although the Nutmeg state has a solid Democratic delegation of six in the lower house. The answer here is that there has been no Republican solidarity since the passing of J. Henry Roraback. Any one of the Republican factions striving for supremacy would rather see the Democrats win than any other one of the Republican factions.

Whole of New England Shapes for Republicans

So the whole of New England shapes up for the Republicans, from present prospects, as a gain of one senator, in New Hampshire, and one representative, also in New Hampshire, and one governor, in Massachusetts, with none of these gains absolutely sure!

The most optimistic Republican to whom the writer has talked does not believe there is a chance for the Republicans to gain a senator in New York, though two are being elected in November. Some think Thomas E. Dewey might beat Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, but not many. But the really important point is that the Empire state, whose 47 electoral votes are an absolute necessity to a Republican presidential victory, is expected to elect two Democratic senators this fall, and to elect 29 Democratic members of the house to 16 Republicans!

In Pennsylvania re-election of Sen. James J. Davis is regarded as certain, but that is not a gain. There is also the probability of gaining a Republican governor. The Keystone state will tell the story of whether the Republicans make any substantial gain in the house this campaign.

In New Jersey there is another real battle, with odds about even as to whether ex-Sen. W. Warren Barbour, Republican, can defeat his Democratic opponent. Barbour's election would be a gain.

Just two probable senate gains from the Mason and Dixon's line to Canada!

See Tough Fight Ahead for Thirty-Hour Week Law

Every indication is that the fight for the 30-hour week is going to be closer in the coming session of congress than ever before, with the distinct possibility, though not probability, that it will be enacted.

When the proposal was first made by the then senator—now justice—Hugo L. Black, it was regarded as fantastic. There was loud clamor from business that it was impossible, that it simply could not be worked, and that it would wreck returning prosperity.

Sentiment for the idea was obviously greater in the last session of congress, but its supporters realized that it did not have any possibility of mustering a majority vote, and hence it was not seriously pressed. But the situation has changed. Curiously enough, while in all the "purge" contests, save that in the Sixteenth New York district, the more conservative candidate won, this more radical proposal is now obviously going to be stronger in the next congress than the one that is expiring.

Most important in bringing about this change of sentiment is the continuance of the unemployment problem—the fact that it is increasing. So that a definite proposal to remedy the situation forces attention, especially when no one is proposing anything which sounds more sound economically. Not that there is general opinion that the 30-hour week is sound, economically. Quite the contrary. But its friends are fond of remarking that it is a situation which confronts us, not a theory, and that something must be done.

More Government Spending Seen as an Alternative

The only alternative that has been suggested, incidentally, is still more government spending. Nobody likes this very much except a comparatively small minority who agree wholeheartedly with Harry L. Hopkins, and who worry no more about the mounting federal debt than Mariner S. Eccles of the federal reserve board.

Not only that, but not even the most fanatical Hopkins follower believes that if government spending were doubled all unemployment would be eliminated. The problem would still be present.

Second in importance in the elements bringing about a stronger sentiment for the 30-hour week is the able fight already begun for it by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. It must be recalled that Green's prestige and influence on Capitol Hill have been boosted almost beyond exaggeration since the last meeting of congress.

Green's record of primary victories is extraordinary.

Real Break for New Deal in New York Convention

President Roosevelt denies having had anything to do with the action of the New York state Democratic convention, but if he had "planned it that way" it could not have served his purposes any better. It was a break for the New Deal from soup to nuts.

Had the original setup been followed and Gov. Herbert H. Lehman been nominated for senator, no one doubts very much that he would have been elected—but he would have been decidedly a "yes, but" Democrat in the senate.

He would have followed the White House when he thought it was right, and differed when he thought it was wrong. This was evidenced by his letter to Sen. Robert F. Wagner on the Supreme court issue, in which he opposed the President's pet policy. And is evidenced even more importantly—because after all the Supreme court enlargement is generally regarded as dead—in his differing fundamentally with the President about government spending. He thinks the federal government should retrench.

The man nominated for the seat made vacant by the death of Sen. Royal S. Copeland, to which Governor Lehman aspired, is James M. Mead of Buffalo. Mead is a 100 per cent New Dealer.

Expect Democrats to Win All Three Major Offices

Washington assumes now that the Democrats will win all three major offices, re-electing Governor Lehman and Senator Wagner, and electing Mead to Copeland's seat. Mead has had no state-wide experience as a candidate, but he is a good campaigner. He will run like the proverbial bear cat in Buffalo and through Erie county, and will of course get the full organization vote in New York city.

It had been desired to run him for governor if Lehman refused to stand for renomination. Friends thought he could beat most Republicans, but it was the growing conviction that Lehman was the only man who could beat Thomas E. Dewey which resulted in such tremendous pressure being put on to change Lehman's mind.

It is the expectation of observers here that Dewey cannot beat Lehman, which makes the whole slate such a break for Roosevelt. With Dewey elected governor in 1938, and two years to make good and enhance his national reputation, he might have constituted a real threat to the Democracy in 1940. If he is not elected, there is no one yet on the horizon who can become such a menace. Certainly no one who could start off with the prestige, national publicity and lack of opposition that Dewey boasts.

Thus Lehman is put in the position of disposing of the one man calculated to frighten the New Dealers, and at the same time putting in the senate a man who will vote for New Deal measures to which Lehman knows now he will find himself in opposition. It is a very curious political situation, to put mildly.

Visiting Day

By JOE SMITHERS

© D. J. Walsh—WNU Service.

"JUST as if," sputtered red-haired Eileen Donnelly, first-year student nurse at E. C. H., "we girls didn't have work enough to do without getting a whole flock of rubbernecks around to ask silly questions and make idiotic remarks. Ouch, my feet ache!" and lovely Rusty subsided into a chair in the diet kitchen and rubbed tired hands across her eyes as though to wipe away the purple shadows of overwork that lingered there. "Well, I'll say this is no rest-cure, keeping this health factory going according to Ryder! But it's worth it, and, you know, Rusty, darling, if any of us were acting 'supe,' we'd do just as Ryder does, only more so!" comforted Sylvia Cranston as she weighed and measured the difficult baby formula.

"Oh, I suppose so," grumbled Eileen, dejectedly, "but it seems like an awful waste of energy; seems as though a sick person would be a lot safer if his nurse didn't have to work to the point of dropping. One of us will have night duty. If it's poor me I'll do a nice King Tut act in some quiet corner!"

"Rusty's peeved because we have a visiting day, and I'm not sure I blame her!" explained Sylvia.

The smartly coiffed and charmingly gray head of Miss Ryder appeared in the doorway.

"Miss Donnelly, there's a glass of water in seven and it's not covered and there are quite a few specks of dust on it, too; I should never forgive myself if any of our visitors should see such a disgusting example of laxness!" and Miss Ryder departed.

Eileen smiled grimly as she started for the stairs and went noiselessly to No. 7, her trained ears catching and identifying the sounds below as that of the arrival of the first coterie of visitors.

"I'll bet I look like a hot sketch with my hair flying in every direction and my stockings so damp from perspiration that they cling in wrinkled bunches all the way up, and if this uniform is Miss Ryder's idea of a soothing landscape for a dying man, deliver me from her jurisdiction soon."

Voices, high and shrill, low and guttural, soft and eager, voices asking questions and making comments and delivering cheery messages to the tacitly silent patients of E. C. H. floor-ward (street level). Soft wafts of costly perfume; soft rustle of exquisite silks; soft gleam from exquisite jewelry and the white perfection of hands that toil not, carrying costly gloves and purses from Paris. Ironic comparison of such visitors with the hard-working, hard-scrubbing, tired and dejected squad of nurses at E. C. H. Small wonder that Eileen paused a long moment, hands clenching the railing to the stairs; paused to gather her self-control and summon her sense of humor, above all, her fine loyalty and enthusiasm for the nursing profession, before she went in to retrieve the offending specked glass.

And as she made that brief pause and tried to regain her lost cheeriness Rusty realized that her feet ached with a stinging throb and her back was so tired that she hated even the thought of that long walk back up three long flights of stairs to the next to the top floor ward. And all this weariness and discomfort was because of a few rich people who pretended to be interested in their city's hospital!

With set lips Eileen turned and started to enter No. 7, and stopped, rooted to the spot. A man was standing by the perfectly made vacant bed and he was just in the act of reaching out for the offending glass of water! Horrified, Eileen rushed forward and snatched the glass of water, saying: "You mustn't ever drink anything you see on the tables, it might be deadly poison! Don't you know better?" and her voice was crossly maternal; as one would speak to a small boy.

Smoke-gray eyes gleamed down at her from a six-foot height and the softest, southernmost drawl voice she had ever heard in all her work-ridden life, thrilled, the little red-headed nurse as he said: "My it's nice to be scolded by such a pretty girl as you! Go on, say some more, please! I almost think you meant it!" and Rusty was uncomfortably suspicious that he was laughing at her. "But really, the water isn't clean, and it might have been a gargle that was deadly poison! I'll get you a fresh drink," and she was furious with herself for blushing so hotly.

"Let me carry the glass; you look about all in, rotten life for a young girl, this nursing game!" commented the man, walking beside her down the long flights of stairs.

"Oh! you aren't like the others, are you?" cried Rusty, thrilled and grateful.

"The other what?" he asked gently. "Visitors," sighed Rusty.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses Vitamins And Vision; Explains How and Why You Should Feed Your Eyes

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

FOR a number of years, scientists have stressed the importance of a well-balanced diet as a means of maintaining health, promoting growth and preventing disease. Recently, an even more significant development has occurred. It has been determined that a carefully chosen diet is absolutely necessary to preserve the general health and efficiency of every bodily function and that there is a close relationship between a good diet and good eyesight.

Your Food and Your Eyes

Many people regard their eyesight as one of the five senses which operate in some mysterious manner of their own! If they suffer from indigestion, they recognize that it is quite apt to be due to something they ate. If they are troubled with stomach, liver or kidney complaints, they quickly appreciate that prolonged dietary indiscretions may be at the root of the trouble. But it never occurs to them that what they eat may affect the eyes just as profoundly as it affects the internal organs.

It is not uncommon, during an attack of biliousness, to suffer a disturbance of the vision. But that disturbance usually disappears with the disorder that caused it. On the other hand, a deficient diet may produce eye troubles that have a far reaching effect upon health, efficiency, and even personal safety.

Night Blindness Explained

For example, it has been established that there is a definite relation between your vision and the vitamins in your diet; between your ability to drive a car safely at night, and the amount of vitamin A-containing foods that you consume.

To understand this astonishing fact, it is necessary to know that vision under faint illumination is accomplished by means of chemical changes in the pigment at the back of the eye. This is known as the "visual purple" of the retina and one of its important components is carotene, which is the active form of vitamin A.

The visual purple might be compared to the film in a camera. When you are in a dim light and the eyes are suddenly exposed to bright light, the visual purple is greatly reduced or bleached. This change results in a stimulation of the optic nerve and enables you to see clearly.

When an adequate supply of vitamin A is present in the body, the visual purple is rapidly regenerated. But when the supply is inadequate, a much longer period elapses before the corrective chemical change takes place. During the intervening time, many people find it difficult to see.

That is the condition known as "night blindness." And it accounts for the fact that a large proportion of serious motor accidents occur at night. Victims of this deficiency disease are first blinded by approaching headlights, then cannot quickly readjust themselves after the oncoming car has passed. Their ability to drive safely is subsequently impaired for they cannot clearly see the road ahead, and they may miss dangerous curves, pedestrians or other vehicles.

A Common Complaint

Unfortunately, the prevalence of night blindness is not generally recognized, though it is held that urban dwellers are more conscious of it than those living in the rural areas. This is borne out by the fact that ocular disorders from vitamin deficiency are less common in urban than in rural areas.

Children Often Victims

Since the discovery of the close connection between vitamin A and the ability to see in dim light, scientists have tested large numbers of school children to determine whether vitamin A was present in their diet in adequate amounts. It was revealed that from 26 to 79 per cent of the children examined had incipient night blindness.

The same deplorable conditions were found among adults. Mild to moderate degrees of vitamin A deficiency were present in from 10 to over 50 per cent of each group tested.

Yet here is the remarkable thing—in nearly every case, a diet rich in vitamin A for a few weeks restored the vision to normal.

A Significant Experiment

An even more striking example of the power of food to affect the eyesight is to be found in the report of an experiment in which breeding sows were given food in abundance but lacking vitamin A for 160 days before and for 30 days after breeding. In three litters of 35 pigs, all were blind. In another litter of 14 pigs, all were tamin G. This is found most abundantly in meat, milk, eggs, fruit and vegetables.

Were she concerned about protecting the blessing of good eyesight alone, that would be sufficient reason why every homemaker should plan meals that are rich in vitamins. But it is not only the eyes which are dependent upon vitamins, for they have many other functions to perform.

An improper diet may cause people to drive automobiles blindly at night so that they are dangerous not only to themselves and their passengers, but to everyone on the streets and roads. A deficient diet will also send them through life with half-efficient bodies, half-efficient brains, half-efficient senses.

That is why I urge you to learn everything you can about food, so that in planning meals you will not only feed your eyes, your husband's eyes and your children's eyes, but will take advantage of the wonderful discoveries of nutritional science to make every member of the family so efficient that they will enjoy the best of health each day of their lives.

Questions Answered

Mrs. G. C. L.—Yes, indeed, nutritionists do approve of a mid-afternoon snack for most school children. A glass of milk and a slice of buttered bread with jam or preserves; fruit juice and oatmeal cookies; or a chocolate milk shake and graham crackers will provide fresh energy for late afternoon play. Without the between-meal lunch, some children become so fatigued that nerve strain results. Take care, however, that the snack does not destroy the appetite for the evening meal.

Fishermen's Memorial Day

An annual memorial service for fishermen who have been lost at sea is a traditional ceremony of Gloucester, Mass. Every year in August at the memorial service the names of those who have been drowned that year are read and relatives of loved ones of the deceased throw flowers in the sea.

After the service fishermen gather and after tossing their flowers on the waters repeat in unison: "In memory of all the seamen, who through all the years have found a last resting place in the waters that wash every shore, we lovingly strew these flowers."

Flynn Fraud Proof Election System Finest In America

By Raymond T. O'Keefe.

Michael J. Flynn, County Clerk of Cook County has completed installation of a permanent registration system that is termed by experts "not the first, but the finest system in the country." After extensive study and observation of "honest ballot" plan operating in other parts of the nation, Mr. Flynn incorporated the best features into his own fool-proof, fraud proof system.

Chicago has had its permanent registration in effect for over a year but the rest of the county initiated its own setup in the April primaries. "Already it has eliminated dead-men's votes, dual registrations, and other illegal votes from the election lists," Flynn said, "and above all has disclosed that thousands of aliens have heretofore been casting ballots regularly."

Prominent men including doctors, lawyers, dentists and even some important public officials never knew they weren't citizens until permanent registration challenged them to state the date of their naturalization papers and the courts wherein they were issued, Flynn declared.

A common misunderstanding arose when a son believed his father had completed naturalization before he attained his majority and it later developed he was over 21 when his dad's last papers were finally awarded. Still others thought they had the right to vote because they came to this country when very young. Many more were misled by the belief first papers made them citizens.

With the pride of a father extolling the virtues of his child, Mr. Flynn points out the superior features of the plan as it operates from his office in the County building. Proudly he explains the operation of his safe-like, fire-proof master file wherein is kept an accurate and up to the minute record of every voter registered in the 82 country towns under his jurisdiction.

"Just call off a name and I'll have his complete voting record for you in less than five seconds," he challenged.

"Schiaichitano?" Without hesitation he pulled out one of the 2,632 drawers containing the registration cards and immediately located the desired name. Through the aid of a simple code employed by the "Sound-ex" system he quickly located such "stickers" as Berzysniks, Albaduska, Blazczenski, Gzyznikiewicz, or what have you.

He explained that there are 13 variations of the name of Smith, 14 of Kelly, and 36 of Baer, but that under the new system which groups consonants instead of vowels, all are grouped under one reference. Automatically, Flynn said, dual registrations were detected. When a voter moved from one precinct to another, the change was quickly apparent and corrected.

Each registrant in Cook County is required to fill out registration cards in triplicate—the first goes into the master file; the second into the precinct file for county elections; and the third is kept by village officials for local elections. Each contains the voter's signature which must be attached at the polls before he receives a ballot.

Uncle Sam does his bit in keeping the records accurate. Immediately after the registration card is received a personal canvas is made to check on its validity. This is followed up by a non-forwardable card sent thru the mails. If an error in the name or address has been made the card will come back to the county election office and consequently invalidate the registration.

Uncle Sam also checks on voters who haven't cast a ballot for four or more years as revealed by their record on the registration card. They are sent another non-forwardable card, which if returned indicates that the registrant has moved from the precinct.

Printed precinct lists naming each voter in the district are prepared by Flynn's clerks for free distribution to any who want them. This is the first time this service has been given in the history of the County. These lists are supplemented by special sheets sent out to the country towns daily showing recent additions and subtractions caused by deaths or change of address.

Registrations are piling into Flynn's office at a brisk rate and will continue to do so until the deadline. Errors on the cards, however, have been remarkably few. This is attributed mainly to the thorough instructions which County of Cook Judges and Clerks underwent before the inauguration of the system.

Michael J. Flynn's election school which was attended by 1,950 of these election officials is said to have been the first school of its kind and its success is another forward step in good government.

Mr. Flynn is deservedly proud of his permanent registration system and the citizens of Cook County are indeed fortunate to have a public official of the integrity and capability he has shown.

Mr. Flynn asks all interested persons to call upon him freely for any information they may desire relative to the election system. The services of his office are at your command, he says, and he will be more than willing to answer personally all letters to him on that subject.

Bugle Calls

By Zeb Potter

It was in 1814 in Paris. A thin old man, with high top hat, and long boots turned down at the top, strolled by a park. Children were playing. The old man's keen shrewd face look worried. The boys had tired of the bouncing each other on opposite ends of a board placed over a saw horse.

One lad with his ear to the end of the board listened while his companion tapped messages on the high end. This was sound traveling through a rigid body.

Paris was filled with soldiers of ing of tuberculosis. The old man paused in his walk to watch the boys at their game of sending and receiving. Would it be possible, thought the old man to listen with a tube to what is going on inside the chests of my patients, to know more, to save more lives?

He tried it. The stethoscope came into use.

How little we know of this man, Rene Theophile Laennec, truly one of the greatest of men. How much we know of a Hitler, a Stalin, and a Mussolini.

From time to time Editor Semmler in the News-Bulletin, prints stories of fatal traffic accidents. When are the American people going to wake up and realize that they are paying a dreadful price for the desire to speed? In California X marks the spot where some victim of a car was killed. If people cannot control a car and themselves, there is only one alternative, don't let them drive, human life is too precious to be sacrificed on the highways just because some one wants to step on it.

In Congress for twenty-five years John Garner said very little on the floor, had few speeches printed in the record. Yet Garner was and is one of the most influential men in shaping laws in Washington. His advice is asked. Moral: It pays to keep your mouth shut.

Because you are immediately successful in the way of getting a job or obtaining something, don't be scornful and plummeted into the depths of despair. Just realize that after all you are a business person selling goods or a service. The moment you start to sell you are in competition with others. To be successful take time to improve yourself or your product. Discouragement and bitterness of defeat will not help you. It's improvement that you need.

With bright blue skies, clear warm days, late fall flowers still in bloom, October here, has been a lovely month. I have enjoyed it, have you?

Again this week your old friend Zeb takes off his hat. Storm swept roads, a falling temperature, finger tips freezing, yet an urge to render service to ailing humanity, despite the weather—that's the life of our country doctor. To this man, Zeb takes off his hat. Medicine to him is not a game of high pressure salesmanship, but an opportunity to help humans.

That's all this week,
ZEB POTTER.

Sweepstakes of Lemont Big Event

The Lemont Sweepstakes will be the principal race on the program at Raceway Park, 129th street and Ashland Ave., just south of Blue Island and north of Harvey on Sunday October 23, says Edw. J. Rippe, racing director. The doodlebugs will compete in a 40 lap event in that sweepstakes, he says.

Newly designed metal dust protectors are being installed this week in front of the grandstand railing. Moreover, another coat of oil was laid this week and the track carefully worked over.

Last Sunday's main event, the Roseland Sweepstakes brought the crowd to its feet throughout the 35 laps as a four way battle for leadership was finally won by sensational turn maneuvering on the part of Ted Tetterton. Doc Shanebrook, fresh from Los Angeles successes, had an early lead with Tetterton and Harry MacQuinn fighting for second position. Suddenly, on a far turn Tetterton managed to get even with Shanebrook and signaled for the blue center pass flag. He shot ahead and won by a good margin.

There were plenty of close calls during the racing with several cars forced to the guard rails but it was Harry (Senator) Lewis racing in the fifth heat, who struck the rail and was forced against the fence when hit by Bill Smith's car. Lewis felt fortunate in escaping with an injured mouth.

Winners of the first race after the time trials was O'Halloran, Myron Fohr was second. The time was 2:25:34. MacQuinn won the 2nd race with Marshall Lewis 2nd. Time was 2:25:30.

Fourth event was won by B. V. Simmons with M. Wiswald 2nd. Time 2:30:24. Ray Richards' brand new job from Rockford proved flashy in the next race but Ted Tetterton won with time 2:25:34. In the consolation, Ted Johnson won first, with Peter Ronceviech 2nd.

Crowd applause was the basis of choosing candidates for a special matched event run as the 6th. Competing were Harry MacQuinn, Doc Shanebrook and Tetterton. Doc took the lead and held it for the three laps with Tetterton 2nd. Time 59:39.

MOMMY LET ME STAY UP TO TALK TO YOU!

MANY men who travel make it a practice to telephone home every night or two. It's the way to make sure that every one is well, and that things are running smoothly. And it means so much to those at home. Daddy's voice is reassuring—exciting. It is fun to let him share in family pleasures... comforting to have his help on family problems.

Next time you or any member of your family goes away, banish loneliness with frequent voice-visits. Telephoning costs surprisingly little. And by having the charge "reversed," you may, if you wish, have the amount appear on your home telephone bill.

Lower rates are in effect after 7 P. M. and all day Sunday.
